1. Women should start thinking differently. What we mean by that is that they should stop tolerating and putting up with irresponsible behaviour of men towards domestic chores. Men need to be held accountable for not helping. A good example would be that almost all women are devoted to their families and It is considered totally normal. However, when a man cleans a house or cooks usually society considers that It is special.

2. Also, in order to achieve equality, society should not undervalue domestic chores that women are used to take or overestimate casual men's chores such as cleaning, cooking. I believe that women and men have their different point of view regarding domestic chores. Therefore, it has to be changed by the society, for instance , give financial aid in order to hire babysitters or cleaners.

To sum up, equality could be reached by changing attitude towards domestic works, especially in relation to women.

1. Pay attention to your relationships
2. Enrich kids worldview with showing them both genders are able to do domestic chores
3. Make salaries of men and women more equal

Compromise (levutis, Aiste, Paul)

When a couple finds themselves in this kind of disagreement they should make an agreement on domestic chores. Neither side should suffer from an unequal amount of unpaid work.

- 1) Share the chores by days in a week. There can be a small amount of changes and compromise. 3 days for one spouse and 3 days for the other.
- 2) Exchange responsibilities per week. That means that both sex will get an equal opportunity to do domestic chores. Also by exchanging responsibilities weekly the unpaid work will be shared equally.
- 3) In order to equalize men and women unpaid hours of work, a couple or a family, depending on their financial possibilities, should hire theirselves a house maid.
